

Website Offers Debt Solutions

April, 2009

This April, consumers across the United States will be introduced to “Ask Doctor Debt,” a new Web site from the ACA International Education Foundation that serves as a free, friendly and confidential resource for consumers with debt and credit questions.

After months of careful consideration, testing and effort, Ask Doctor Debt will be officially unveiled in late April to coincide with National Credit Education Week, which runs April 20-24, 2009. Consumers will see a friendly, easy-to-use Web site with an advanced search engine that helps clarify their rights and responsibilities in the credit and collection cycle.

While Ask Doctor Debt’s comprehensive and easily searchable FAQ section answers consumers’ questions quickly, users also have the option to e-mail questions, which will be answered on the site.
